While the PSA Tour is in Paris currently, in 2002 in the South of France, in Antibes, the Internationaux de France (French Open) was taking place. Billed as the first outdoor event held facing the Mediterranean Sea, the location was the Pinède Gould, well known for hosting an International Jazz Festival. It featured a home win when Gregory Gaultier beat Englishman Nick Matthew 17-15 in the 5th in the final. FFSquash - Fédération Française de Squash PSA World Tour

In May 1986 the French Squash Federation placed a showcourt produced by French company Puchaux in Paris between the fountains of the Trocadero, facing the Eiffel Tower for a week as part of the Sport Aid initiative. Its aim was to take squash out of the traditional indoor surroundings. The court was also used for the French Open and World Open (in Toulouse) that year. Although squash had arrived in the United States earlier, (beginning at St Pauls School in Conover, New Hampshire and in private homes); Christmas Day 1900 was a landmark date for squash in USA.

It was on this date that the first court built at a club was opened. It was at the Racquet Club in Philadelphia at their original Walnut Street location. Slightly smaller than the standardised dimensions, and built entirely of wood for $500, it proved to be an instant success.

This prompted the club to add three more courts two years later. Again, space constraints meant that they were slightly smaller than the standard 32' by 21'. Unlike the first, they were primarily cement constructed, including the floor, with only the front wall being wooden. The building costs had risen to $1,630! US SQUASH

When Manchester won the right to host the Commonwealth Games 2002, the venue building programme included a National Squash Centre - which is being used for the Manchester Open this week. In addition to six courts (convertible to four doubles), it included a showcourt (also convertible to doubles), mounted on a hover-pad system.

This enabled it to move through the opening built into the adjacent indoor running track and seating to be built round it for over 2,000 spectators, as pictured (the top photo from the Games 2002 shows the court in the athletics area, with the bottom shot showing the black partition it had moved through to enter the squash area).

Egypt is synonymous with event hosting, currently in El Gouna, but World Federation founder members Egypt had hoped to host their first world championship – the world Amateur Team & Individual – back in 1979. However, while finances were no problem the lack of facilities prevented it. The National Stadium courts (below) would come on stream two years later so the first of the current 13 World Championship stagings in Egypt was the Men's Teams in 1985. Squash may not have been played in prehistoric times, but in October 2007 it joined with them! A showcourt was erected in the Chicago Field Museum under the watchful eye of Sue, their resident T-Rex, and fighting elephants, for the two day event. It was presented by METROSquash, the city's urban squash & education programme to showcase squash to visitors and students, as well as fund-raise. Professionals including Amr Shabana, John White, Peter Nicol, Natalie Grainger & Jonathon Power played, coaching sessions held, and a dinner for 500 staged. The Calcutta Racket Club in India has a huge history, having been formed in 1793 and thus one of the oldest clubs in the world. The 'Racket' was not a reference to sport, but derived from the 'Racket Bird' that lived in the trees around its site! The club was initially known as the Fives Court or Gamekhana. The game of rackets gave way to squash in the 1930s.

It started with two courts, and added two more in January 1951, the opening by H.E. Raja Sir Maharaj Singh, Governor ... See more

The historic Jeu de Paume Club in central Paris is located on the top floor of a building between the Arc de Triomphe and the Trocadéro.

The club originated in 1908, and replaced one of its Paume (real tennis) courts with four squash courts in 1927, at a time when squash (or squash rackets as it was then called), was almost unknown in France. These courts became the starting point for squash in the country.

One court had part of a sidewall replaced with glass and now opens into the club lounge. The club hosted some matches in the WSF Women's World Team Championship in 2016.

You might have thought that the largest gallery for a court (above the solid back wall) in the 1950's would have been at the Lansdowne Club in London, home of the British Open, ..... but that would have been incorrect. Until 1958 it was the Wanderers Club in Johannesburg, South Africa which could hold 300 – 400. Then in 1958 along came the pictured court which could hold 500 spectators, the majority in a towering block as well as 100 in two side galleries. It was built in the grounds of Cairo University. Another top ranking for Egypt! (The Lansdowne Club court had 144 seats and standing for 60 more).
