The start of squash in Argentina is clear – 4 December 1929. That is the date that a British group in Buenos Aires founded the less than imaginatively titled The Squash Club (see photo).

Soon after, Prince Albert of York (later George VI King of Great Britain) was a visitor, as were Hashim Khan and more recent stars. It is still on Florida Street in downtown Buenos Aires.

In the 1950s Buenos Aires also featured squash at the Jockey Club, Hurlingham Club, Naval College and in Rosario – with the Squash Club professional, M.A Filone, travelling to New York to play the US Open in 1954 too.

Real expansion came from the 1980s with court building taking place that now means squash courts can be found in a number of provinces.

The country hosted the first squash event to be part of the PanAm Games – in 1995 when the event took place in the city of Mar Del Plata, and has regularly hosted PSA & PanAm Championships.

Austria opened its' first courts in 1976, when, possibly uniquely, five were built in Vienna-Oberlaa in a tent! The tennis & general sports club was later expanded to 19 courts and was the venue of European Teams 2000 and Men's World Teams 2003. (It was demolished in 2008 to make space for a large Spa & Leisure Centre). The Austrian Federation was founded in 1978 and first national championships held the same year in Salzburg. Silvia Seidl won the women's event and Hans-Wolf Selden (pic) was the men's winner. Selden had learnt to play squash when living in South Africa and also won the national title the next two years in 1979 and 1980. The last title was at Club 19 in Vienna, his own newly opened club, which is now the oldest existing squash club in Austria.

In 1957 the Australian Squash Rackets Association reported growth, saying 'Blocks of squash courts erected as a commercial proposition are springing up rapidly, particularly in Sydney, where the game is enjoying unexampled prosperity. It is only a matter of time before Australia begins to produce players who will at least equal the best that England can show'. It certainly happened! Squash Australia

SQUASH in N.S.W.

The first Squash Racquets courts in New South Wales were built in the late 1920's, and were restricted mainly to private clubs such as the Royal Sydney Golf Club, Killara Golf Club, University Club and Sydney Squash Racquets Club. In 1935, the first competition was conducted by the newly formed New South Wales Squash Racquets Association. In that year, the New South Wales Championships were also commenced.

With the advent of the war in 1939, the progress of the game stopped, but many servicemen, particularly Air Force chaps who may never have seen the game, were introduced to it whilst on tour overseas in Canada, America and England. After the war, because of the generally unsettled conditions, restrictions on building, etc., the game remained fairly static.

In 1955, the beginning of this boom, there were an average of 18 competition teams playing each year. At the beginning of 1956 there were 23 teams. Then came the real impact of all these new courts; and in 1957 two competitions conducted by the Association attracted entries from 109 teams. In 1958 this was more than doubled, and entries were received from more than 240 teams. The first competition conducted this year attracted entries from 195 teams, and so too we feel that the spring competition will also attract in the vicinity of 200 and the figures show an increase each year of 100%, truly an amazing figure, and a figure which reflects the growth of squash over the past three or four years.

Possibly the most consistent champion Squash has produced in N.S.W. is Geoff Slade. Four times winner of the N.S.W. Championships, Geoff first took the crown in 1939 and followed with wins in 1946, 1950 and 1953 as well as being runner up on several occasions. Undoubtedly best for the war years when Squash lay idle, Geoff would have created a still greater record.

The beginning of 1958 saw the first move in the country area. Private courts were erected in various towns and then followed public courts, as we know them here in Sydney. 1959

According to an article in Australian Squash Player magazine in 1972 the first court in Australia was one at the Flinders Naval Base, made from the sides of an old submarine hull! Bert Armstrong, renowned Australian collector and font of knowledge reckons this may not be correct, but he is certain that the Royal Melbourne Club was the first to appear in 1913. It also reports on a court with round corners! Squash Australia

The first public court in Melbourne was situated in Little Collins Street, at Pearce Bjelke-Petersen's gymnasium, but it was an odd shaped court with a low roof and round corners.

The next public court was built in the Empitr Arcade. One of the interesting sidelights to this court was the rumour that there may have been peep holes drilled through the wall to the ladies' changing room.

Frank Findlay's gymnasium in Prescott Arcade, off Little Collins Street, had the first court available to rent for the general public.

Frank could not recall the exact year, but remembers that in 1932, Gardner and Lang (the owners) refused him permission to erect a court on the roof of the building. Subsequently in either 1933 or 1934 he was able to incorporate a court inside his gym.

Next came Bickham's court in Elwood and then public courts at St. Kilda railway station.

The first court in the city of Melbourne was at the Royal Melbourne Tennis Club at the top of Exhibition Street and is there to this day. The club had two courts, one orthodox and the other an odd size.

Then the Naval and Military Club built a court in their old premises in Alfred Place. The Athenaeum Club in Collins Street followed with an odd shaped court which is almost two feet wider than standard.

In 1935 the Sandringham Club copied the Naval and Military court as in quick succession did the Alma, South Yarra, L.T.A.V. and the Royal South Yarra Tennis Clubs.

Until 1975 there were only ten courts in Belgium. The first courts dated back to 1939, built in the Shell Building in Brussels, with a further two added to the Beerschot Club in Antwerp after WW2. But by 1970 both were closed. However after the Shell courts lease finished, in 1971 the owners built the five court Brussels Squash Club in the grounds of the Royal Leopold Tennis Club.

Following on from the formation of the Belgian Federation in 1974, the nation began entering and hosting European Championships, the first hosting being the Men's Team Championship in 1976.

The Belgian Squash Federation was split up in 1995 into the Ligue Francophone de Squash and Squash Vlaanderen. After this, in 2003, Squash Vlaanderen initiated a Flemish Squash Centre in Herentals. Currently the nation features around 75 affiliated Clubs and 300 courts. Squash Vlaanderen vzw

The Belgian Squash Association was founded in 1974 by Count Hubert Dumonceau de Bergendael, Georges Lazar and Mr de Borman. This, two years after arranging the move of the Brussels squash club from the centre of Brussels.

They agreed with the Leopold Club in Uccle a 100 years lease of a spot of ground located next to the clubhouse of the Club. There they built a five court club which at this time also hosted the Belgian Squash Association, which later on moved to other premises.

A fire that started in the kitchen of the club in December 1977 led to only two of the courts being repairable. Ligue francophone de squash

Squash was first played in Bermuda around 1930 when two courts were built by the British Military. Later, in 1959 a group of keen players decided to form the Bermuda Squash Rackets Association. In 1968 squash took off with two courts, followed by two more in 1974 at the Association's Devonshire clubhouse. A glassback followed. Despite being essentially a club, in 1992 Bermuda managed to send a team to the World Junior Team Championships in Hong Kong. They have also sent a squad to the Men's World Team Championship three times from 2003 onwards. The small North Atlantic territory with a population of only around 70,000 took squash promotion to a new level when it hosted the Men's World Open in 2007. Small island, impressively vibrant! Bolivia is not the first place that comes to mind as a squash nation. With its two capital cities – La Paz the seat of government - considered to be the highest 'capital' in the world at over 3,500m - and Sucre the actual capital at only slightly lower 2,800m, it may be an environment needing altitude balls, but has a new Federation that is flying high too!

February 2014 saw Bolivia enter their first international event – even before the first court had been built in the country! They took eleven players to the South American Junior Championship in Asuncion, Paraguay - and came away with a medal. Adapted racquetball courts had been used for training.

The first three international courts were built in 2014 and only a year later the Bolivian Federation was formed and the 2015 South American Championships were played on the courts. Extra courts were built and in 2018 it meant that squash could be included in the South American Games played in the city of Cochabamba. Now Bolivia has nearly 20 courts. Cochabamba has several, with others at Oruru, Santa Cruz with two outdoor courts, Sucre too - and Potosi with "Raquet Squash Alegria" at 3854 meters above sea level, a Squash court in the sky! The Estonian Squash Federation gained a national training centre in 2016 through an agreement with the Tere Tennis Club in Tallinn, one of the largest Baltic facilities, with four new courts as the Federation training base.

At the time Estonian Squash Federations' Ardo Nomm commented 'These new courts give us completely new opportunities to develop squash in Estonia. We have better training conditions and we can now organize international tournaments at any level. There is also space to bring a glass court if necessary.'

Going back to 1972 visitors to Addis Ababa, Ethiopia could play squash alongside local members at two courts at the Imperial Golf Club or a further one at the Ministry of Mines, as courts arrived in the African nation.

While Sweden had already begun a growth spurt, according to the reported number of courts in mainland Europe in 1974, a range of countries were just about to start theirs. The boom in France, Germany and Netherlands, for example, would begin soon after.

Squash first landed in Fiji as early as 1920 when the Governor had a court erected at Government House. But growth in the main of the around 300 South Pacific islands that make up Fiji didn't begin until the 1960 when Oceania visitors prompted interest.

In 1966 the court built in the grounds of his house in the 1930's by solicitor Sir Howard Ellis was re-opened as the Suva Club, followed by the Defence & United Clubs. Public courts were added and the Fiji Federation, formed in 1968 is active in Oceania Region Championships.

Squash came to Finland very briefly in 1940 when three tennis players built three courts in an apartment building in Helsinki. But WW2 took them away and it was nearly 30 years later in 1968 when another Finnish tennis player, national champion Sakari Salo re-started squash – in the same vacant building, by coincidence.

The first club, Helsinki Squash Club, had been founded in 1970, and while the Finnish Squash Association was founded in 1971 it was not initially recognised because the authorities demanded that there must be at least three Clubs. Poku Salo, pictured below winning the first Finnish National Championship in 1970, then founded two new clubs and the authorities approved the Finnish Squash Association officially in 1971. (Note: the visible sidewall door led to a store-room, while the entry to the court was further up the sidewall)

Now, there are clubs in 40 cities, the country has had a World Junior Champion (Juha Raumolin, 1992) and highly ranked pros such as Sami Elopuro & more recently Olli Tuominen. World & European Championships have also been hosted multiple times. Squash Suomi Finland

The French Squash Federation started life as the Comite du Squash, a branch of the French Tennis Association, in 1974. However, the first courts of the nation were built at the Jeu de Paume Club in Paris 1927. It was on 17 January 1981 that the Comite du Squash was upgraded into a fully-fledged independent Federation, at a point where there were over 100 courts and 350 in the country. (Within ten years clubs and courts had increased three-fold). Since then France has had two World Open Champions, Thierry Lincou and Gregory Gaultier in 2004 & 2015 respectively, as well as Camille Serme, winner of the British & US Open titles in 2015 & 2016.

With Greg Gaultier returning to action at the WSF Men's World Team Championship next month it is interesting to recall that it was as recently as 1975 that the French Squash Federation was formed. This, after squash was kick-started there by the opening of Squash Montparnasse in Paris, to add to the trio of old rackets clubs already in existence. More clubs and European / World Championship hostings have followed on from the Montparnasse opening. As for players, European titles have been won, Thierry Lincou & Greg Gaultier won the World Open and reached world #1 ranking, while Camille Serme has won both the US & British Open titles. 2025 sees the 50th anniversary of squash in France being formalised. In 1975 a squash committee was formed within the French Lawn Tennis Association. The first National Championships were held in March that year, following which a men's team participated in the European Team Championships and the first French Open was held in May at Squash Montparnasse. In December 1980 it was decided that it was time to create a separate entity for the sport and in 1981 the Fédération Française de Squash Raquettes (FFSR) was created. Later, in 1989, the FFSR changed its name to Fédération Française de Squash (FFS).

The years since have featured international success including Thierry Lincou and Gregory Gaultier being crowned world champion, Camille Serme winning the British & US Opens, and their men's and women's sides becoming European team champions.

The French Squash Federation was formed in 1975, but such was the growth of squash in the country that only ten years later the number of clubs had grown rapidly, including this 1985 list for the Paris region. FFSquash - Fédération Française de Squash

The historic Jeu de Paume Club in central Paris is located on the top floor of a building between the Arc de Triomphe and the Trocadéro.

The club originated in 1908, and replaced one of its Paume (real tennis) courts with four squash courts in 1927, at a time when squash (or squash rackets as it was then called), was almost unknown in France. These courts became the starting point for squash in the country.

One court had part of a sidewall replaced with glass and now opens into the club lounge. The club hosted some matches in the WSF Women's World Team Championship in 2016.

Only a few years after the German federation was formed in 1975, Peter Helleman, Vice-President, summed up progress. "In 1978, there were 80 squash centers, this number increased to 130 in 1979. At the end of 1980, we had 200, which corresponds to 1,300 courts, for ± 170,000 players. Not included in these figures are the 172 private clubs with a total of 17,500 members. We are therefore, at the end of the 1980s, at ± 185,000 squash players in Germany. Deutscher Squash Verband e.V.

It is estimated that in 1985, there will be approximately 600 centers for 4,000 sites. The number of players will amount to ± 500,000 players and 50,000 members of private clubs. Such growth testifies to the scale that squash is gaining in Germany. The Federation has put together an excellent training program for juniors. This is already bearing fruit: the junior and senior squash champion of the Federal Republic is none other than a 17-year-old: Carol Martini (right). In the national ranking, he is followed by the talented and intelligent Conny Hasselbach (left)."

Squash at 'The Rock' moved forward when The Gibraltar Squash Rackets Club was founded in 1969. It had no courts to its name and used the only civilian court at Victoria stadium and used various Military courts by arrangement.

In 1993 the Government of Gibraltar gave the court building and site to GSRC on the understanding they would form an Association and become the governing body for squash in Gibraltar. The Gibraltar Squash Association was then formed.

The building was refurbished and two new courts were built and these were used together with the existing court.

Five years later this former military court was demolished and replaced by two new courts. This was the home of GSA until the end of 2019 when the Association moved to a brand new 6 court facility within a large sports complex at Europa Point built for the 2019 Island Games. The Association has been hosting PSA events in its former premises since 2012. This week it is holding the Gibraltar Open at Europa Point for the first time.

Squash was born twice in Germany. The first time was in Berlin in 1930, when the first four courts were built. Dr. Ernst von Siemens of the Siemens Company had been exposed to the sport in England and initiated the construction of sports facilities for employees.

In addition to Siemens courts, there were two other Centres prior to the WW2. The Berlin Hallen Tennis Club had a court, and in 1936 a number of squash courts were built in the house of the German Aviation Association, which were used by pilots.

The second beginning came in 1968 when a German Businessman, Henning Harders, returned from Australia where he had played and built three courts in Hamburg – which became the nucleus of the sport, with the German Squash Rackets Association (DSRV) founded in 1973.

In the ten years after the three Hamburg courts were built there were around 100 centres with 600 courts and over 35,000 players. Expansion from this base led to estimates that there were nearly 7,000 courts in around 1,300 clubs by the mid-nineties. (An early centre in Nurnberg pictured). Deutscher Squash Verband e.V.

1957 GIBRALTAR SQUASH

Although squash rackets has its keen followers in Scandinavia, Holland, Belgium, and France the game has not yet gained a foothold in Spain. A mile from the Spanish frontier at the gateway to the Mediterranean, however, lies the British outpost of Gibraltar, and here squash has once again been flourishing during the past season.

The leading centre for the game on the Rock is the Naval Officers' Pavilion, which has an excellent standard court, on which many matches are played between the club and Service units. Other courts are attached to the Officers' Mess of the Royal Artillery, at Europa, and at Rossa, the latter administered by the Fortress Engineer Regiment of the Royal Engineers. In addition there is a particularly fine private court in the grounds of Government House (known, incidentally, as The Convent). This was built by General Sir Charles Harrington when he was Governor of Gibraltar in 1936, and the court is well maintained under the present Commander-in-Chief of the Rock, General Sir Harold Redman, himself a squash player.

As yet Gibraltar have not formed their own S.R.A., but since there are a number of keen civilian players the formation of a representative association may not be far distant. The best player on the Rock for some years has been Keith Hoare, son of the former Gibraltar rackets professional and a regular winner of post-war tournaments at the N.O.P. Usually Hoare finds few opponents to extend him, but Commander Alan Seymour-Haydon, now Naval Attaché at Madrid, occasionally visits the Rock on duty, and among officers recently there with the Home Fleet was another former Navy champion in Lieut-Cdr. Mike Amworth. The Seaford Highlanders, whose first battalion is now garrisoning Gibraltar, have been among the keenest units on the squash court, their commanding officer, Lt-Col. I. A. Robertson, being the best Service player stationed there.

Apart from officers attached to units serving on the Rock, and naval teams from ships of the Mediterranean and Home Fleets few English players seem to find their way to Gibraltar during the squash season but Gerald Pawle spent a month at the Rock recently and played in two matches in which Gibraltar's leading players took part. In the first, in which a team of past and present Service players led by Lt-Col. Robertson was narrowly beaten by Keith Hoare's side, Pawle won an exciting match with Hoare lasting 11 hours after choosing sudden death in the third game, having lost the first two. The scores were:—

Lt.-Cdr. S. G. S. Pawle (R.N.V.R.) b W. K. Hoare (Gibraltar) 4-9, 5-9, 9-8, 9-6, 9-4. Lt.-Col. A. Robertson b W. M. Isola (Gibraltar) 3-9, 9-2, 9-5, 9-7. Cdr. J. Y. C. Roxburgh lost to S/Ldr. E. G. Downes (Gibraltar) 4-9, 9-7, 3-9, 4-9. Capt. J. S. Houston lost to R. Andlaw (Gibraltar) 9-7, 9-6, 8-10, 1-9, 5-9. 2nd-Lt. F. Scott lost to C. Cabedo (Gibraltar) 9-5, 6-9, 4-9, 3-9.

In the second match, which Hoare's team again won 3-2, Hoare dropped only five points in the top set to Robertson but Downes, the R.A.F.'s best player, was beaten in straight games by Pawle; Houston beat Isola 3-1, but Scott lost a long match with another R.A.F. player, Flight-Lt. O. Cussen by two points in the fifth game to level the scores. In the remaining set Flight-Lt. F. Pearce won a marathon match against J. Wolfe-Murray of the Seaford Highlanders 10-8, 5-9, 7-9, 10-9, 9-5.

Squash was first played in Hong Kong when two rackets courts were converted into six squash courts at Victoria Barracks, thought to be during the 1920's. The British Army built a few more but squash really began to expand in the 1960s after the Hong Kong SRA was formed in 1961, public courts opened. Then in the 1970's a real boom started by the start of the Island Club (Host of the early Hong Kong Opens), and then in 1986 with the opening of the 18 court Hong Kong Squash Centre (on the site of the demolished Victoria Barracks). Since then the number of courts has risen to 500+ now, and a number of World & Asian Senior & Junior Championships have been staged in Hong Kong, China.

Before clubs arrived in Hungary, the first court in the country was built at the Duna-International Hotel in 1979, an initiative by the manager who felt that such a prestigious hotel must have one! Hungary became the 25th European Federation member in 1990. (The hotel re-opened as a Marriott in 1994, and the court was re-purposed but clubs sprung up in the country after the single court start). The first court in Indonesia was built in 1942 in Surabaya city, but it was short-lived for squash as the Japanese army took it over for storage later during WW2. In 1980 a local architect Jeffrey Kijono was introduced to squash as a sport by Dutch expatriates who were working for a client company. They built a court that would become the first at Bandung Squash Club, after which a glass backwall court was added. Kijono spearheaded adding two more courts to BSC, and built to total 4 courts before it was closed and moved location thirty years later. The first National Championship held in 1982 at Bandung Squash Club (with Kijono pictured with runner-up GS Bambang). Indonesia took part in the multi-event Southeast Asian Games (SEA Games) for the first time in 1992, and hosted it a year later, and Kijono became their first representative player - in Singapore.

City Squash Club was the first squash club in Hungary, opened in 1991 in central Buda district of Budapest. Only two years later it held a PSA event, the Budapest Open. From those four initial courts Hungary now has around 150 courts in 63 different locations. The city of Szeged staged the World University Squash Championships in 2006, and since then Hungary has hosted four Junior, Club and Team European Championships. The first court in Ireland was built at Dublin's Fitzwilliam Club in 1902, but there were a number of other ones dotted around in the early years of the 20th century, with league squash going on too. After the formation of the British SRA in 1928 it was thought that a logical step would be to set up an Irish Federation; and in 1935 articles were drawn up. These were approved and on 20 December 1935 the first AGM of the Irish SRA was held at Fitzwilliam. The Irish Men's Open had already started to be held in 1932, and representative matches began in 1938 when a five man men's team travelled to Edinburgh to play Scotland (losing 4-1). Irish teams played in the first European Men's and Women's Team Championships in 1973 and 1978 respectively.

Squash in Jamaica was introduced by British garrisons stationed there – normally open air, concrete floor courts, but general play really started in 1962. This was when the Liguanea Club in Kingston (pic, 1966) built its' first roofed, wooden floor court.

The start of representative matches came in 1966 when a Jamaican team from the club competed against Bahamas & Bermuda club teams in the first of a regular triangular 'Rosebowl' series.

Jamaica Squash Association formed in February 1977 and with the Liguanea club courts expanding from 1978 to the current six, a number of events have been staged on the island.

These courts were lost and until around 1970, the only two Japanese courts were one was at Yokohama Country and Athletic Club, and the other was at another international club in Kobe.

In 1971 the Japan Squash Racket Association was established and the first public court was built in the same year in Yokohama, the pictured Morinaga Angel Squash Club.

The beginnings of squash in Malaysia is thought to have occurred in the 1920s when the British introduced it to the country (then called Malaya). The first event landmark came in 1939 when a championship was held at the Malay College in Kuala Kangsar, won by HRH Tuanku Ja'afar, ruler of the State of Negri Sembilan. Fast forward to 1973, a year after the formation of the Malaysian Squash Federation (SRAM) the first National Championship was held – won by Tunku Imran, the son of Tuanku Ja'afar! Tunku Imran went on to become not only President of SRAM, but also of WSF (1989-1996). A turning point for squash in Malaysia was the awarding of the Commonwealth Games 1998 to Kuala Lumpur. A national centre was built at Bukit Jalil, and programmes initiated to bring forward squadrons of young players intensified. Included among these were Ong Beng Hee and Nicol David who became World Junior Champions and senior tour pros. In the case of David, a wonderful career embracing eight World Championship titles. These two have been followed by a number of top line performers, and Bukit Jalil preceded many new facilities being built. There are 600+ courts in the country now. The nation has already hosted 18 world title events. Squash Racquets Association of Malaysia

It was during the 1930s that squash arrived in the Principality of Monaco when the Monte Carlo Country Club was built. However, it was not until the 1960s until H.H. Prince Rainier, who had played in England and had a court in his Palace, suggested that a squash club would popularise the sport. Thus the Monte Carlo Squash Club was formed in 1968, featuring three courts. The following year Prince Rainier reached the final of the 1969 Monaco International Championship, beaten by Aris Vatimbella 9-6 10-9 2-9 9-7, who was instrumental in the growth of interest at the time. The general beginnings of squash in Netherlands can be traced back to 1936 when businessman J.M. Fentener van Vlissingen had a squash court constructed in Utrecht in 1935; with squash being introduced in Amsterdam, Rotterdam and The Hague shortly afterwards. This led to the formation of the Dutch Squash Federation in 1939.

However, the first court in the country dates back to 1914 at Middachten Castle, which itself has a history from the Middle Ages. In that year, William Count Bentinck commissioned a court so that he could play squash there. While the space was used later as a carpentry workshop and storage area, in 2013 a restoration project was started, supported by the Federation, and squash is again being played at Middachten Castle, as it was over a century ago. Although our neighbours the Swedes have been playing squash since the late 30's, the first squash-centre open to public in Norway was opened in 1978. During these last seven years courts have popped up all across our widely spread country, and today the number of centres is just below 40, mostly sited around the major cities of Oslo, Bergen and Stavanger. The NSRA registers with satisfaction that this number is increasing with steady speed.

The number of clubs is also growing, and 2000 members are now attached to these clubs. Altogether just over 20,000 Norwegians have found pleasure in the game, and his number is constantly increasing.

In the short time we've played the game our national sides have improved from near last to a position just below the middle of the ladder on the European chart. The good work in junior-squash has obviously also been noticed out in Europe, proven by the positive reaction towards the holding of these junior championships.

The NSRA was formed in 1979, and has since proven a good platform for the further development of the sport, especially on the administration side.

Squash courts in Nigeria can be traced by to the 1930's where, for example, two courts were built in Kaduna, and others in Lagos. Not all were built to standard specifications though. The court at Bauchi (pictured) was half as wide again as standard and had an entrance (not a door) half way along the right side wall! One in Potiskum was built entirely of red mud to merge with surrounding huts.

But growth followed in facilities, standards and coaching too. By 1970 there were already a few dozen court in the Lagos area, including four at the well-appointed Ikoyi Club. Open championships began in 1973 with the Lagos State Open. Nigeria competed in the Men's World Team Championship for the first time in 1979.

The start of squash in Poland came in 1976 when some Swedish contractors working in Brodnica on a hotel construction built a court that they could play on.

Following on, in 1982 the first sport club with squash was established in Warsaw. It was the British Embassy Country Club and it offered access only for the Embassy's employees and their guests initially, before being opened as a public centre more recently.

In 1994, the first two public courts were built at the University of Physical Education in Warsaw. These, the Magnum Club, are known as the birthplace of squash for Polish players.

Squash became organised in Scotland from 1936 when the Scottish Squash Rackets Association was formed, but the sport was played at a number of centres in Scotland for many years before then. Aberdeen and Glasgow both had squash clubs and in Edinburgh the Watsonians (formed 1934) and Edinburgh Academicals owned courts as an adjunct to their other activities. In addition, there were a number of private courts.

The opening of the Edinburgh Sports Club, also in 1936, gave impetus to the game in the capital and the club rapidly became the largest in Scotland, its original three courts being increased in 1938 to five, with a doubles court in addition.

The Aberdeen Squash Rackets Club, the oldest in the country established in 1913, had its courts destroyed during the WW2 before being re-built.

Scotland started entering teams in World Championships after being part of GB teams in 1980, reaching the Men's Team Championships semi-finals in 2001. Just before this Peter Nicol had become World Champion in 1999 (having lost in the two preceding finals), while another team member John White reached the World Open final in 2002. The story of squash in Turkey began in 1977 when Ömer Ersoy, an academic, travelled to the German city of Karlsruhe for his post-doctoral research. During his stay, Ersoy (pic) discovered the sport of squash and quickly became captivated by it.

However, when he returned to his home country in 1978, he encountered a significant obstacle: there were no squash courts in Turkey at the time. He was determined to bring squash to Turkey with his dream being realised when Turkey's first squash court was opened at the Istanbul Hilton Hotel in 1985.

Following this more courts started to appear in different parts of the country. In the late 1980s and early 1990s, several other clubs began to establish squash courts, furthering the sport's growth. Notable among these were Istanbul's Hillside City Club which added six courts in 1990, Pamukspor, BÜMED (Boğaziçi University Sports Club), and Mayadrom, all of which contributed to squash's rising popularity.

With the addition of other clubs and university courts there were already around 100 courts in the country by 2005.

The Turkish Federation first came into being in 2003, and the nation first started sending teams to the European Nations Cup in 2005.

In the 1940s Uganda had courts in the three main towns of Kampala, Jinga and Entebbe, and in several up-country towns. The Uganda Championship was held at the Kampala Club (below) – for both men & Women. In August 1950 a friendly match was arranged in Nairobi between Kenya and four Ugandan players who were then available in Kenya. The result was a 2 all draw'.
A year after the Uganda Squash Association was formed in 1972 their first event was staged, the Makerete University Open. – run in conjunction with the Ugandan University Games. It was won by Ugandan Cajetan DeSouza, but the second was won by an entry from Kenya, Don Ayton. Uganda Squash

Squash began in the South American nation of Uruguay in the 1930s when the British Schools Old Boys Club built two squash courts at their original venue in Montevideo.
However expansion came beyond past pupils in 1975 when some members of the Old Boys Club contacted a local Sports club, Club Carrasco, and proposed the construction of two squash courts in the old "Paleta Court" that was not being used. It was fruitful decision, young players started to play in Club Carrasco and squash started to expand in Uruguay. In 1977 the nation first played Argentina (pic).
Club Carrasco, the main hub of squash in Uruguay, saw the leading Player Paul Bragard winning the South American Championship in 1985, and the club hosting the Montevideo Open and international matches / exhibitions. These included a women's (WISPA) visit in 2007. (from left: Jean Paul Bragard – son & national champion, Sarah Fitz-Gerald, Nicol David, Rachael Grinham, Paul Bragard) Club Carrasco

Squash in Ukraine can trace its roots back to 2000 at the country's sole court at Kiev Sports Club. But so enthusiastic was a property developer Lazutenkou after a visit to Amsterdam in 2008 to support Ukraine's first appearance in the European Team Championships that he decided to build the four-court Grand Prix club in the city.
In 2018, Kiev, along with Yerevan in Armenia were the two stops of the WSF Ambassadors Programme that year (pics), led by stars Camille Serme and Ramy Ashour, along with top referee and coach Marko Podgorsek and Ronny Vlassaks.
As the citizens of Ukraine fight the unimaginable horror of the Russian invasion of their nation, thoughts are with the country and its people; including the squash community that we can only hope stay safe and can eventually blossom in peace again. In 1884 James Conover, a teacher at St. Paul's School in Concord, New Hampshire, USA, built the first squash courts outside England. Conover copied the Harrow courts by consulting with his college roommate, an Old Harrovian.

Although squash had arrived in the United States earlier, (beginning at St Pauls School in Conover, New Hampshire and in private homes); Christmas Day 1900 was a landmark date for squash in USA.
It was on this date that the first court built at a club was opened. It was at the Racquet Club in Philadelphia at their original Walnut Street location. Slightly smaller than the standardised dimensions, and built entirely of wood for $500, it proved to be an instant success.
This prompted the club to add three more courts two years later. Again, space constraints meant that they were slightly smaller than the standard 32' by 21'. Unlike the first, they were primarily cement constructed, including the floor, with only the front wall being wooden. The building costs had risen to $1,630! US SQUASH

Go back to 1937 and squash in Wales consisted on one Club in the south of the country - Cardiff Squash Club - which had just built its first two courts, and a country club in the north of the country. A year later Wales formed a national federation as three more courts were built in separate locations in the south.

The south began to expand quite quickly, but by the mid-1960s the north began to catch up. In 1965 there were 27 clubs in the south, 14 in the north.

Wales started playing international matches, against Scotland and Wales in 1947, followed by England in 1951.

The Welsh men's team had their best ever World Championship finish in 1999, losing in the final to hosts, Egypt; while on an individual basis it can boast a British Open Champion, David Evans, who won in 2000. (1999 squad pictured after beating England in the semi- finals: L to R: Gavin Jones, Greg Tippings, Chris Robertson (manager), David Evans, Alex Gough).

The first squash court in Southern Africa was seemingly built in the Zimbabwean second city of Bulawayo in 1898 at the Bulawayo Club. It had the dimensions used at Lords, London (42ft x 25ft) but four years later was rebuilt to the standard 32ft x 21ft.

A plaque at the club denotes not only the building date but that HRH Edward Prince of Wales played on the court in 1925. The club was also part of leagues which began locally as early as 1932.

Though the court was refurbished, currently it has been re-purposed as a small clothing and sandal factory.

South Wales did already have a few courts, but it was on 27 September 1937 that the first squash club opened in Cardiff.

Led by first Secretary, Maurice Turnbull (pictured at the start of building from the club website), nine men formed a company named Welsh Squash Rackets (Cardiff) Ltd, and spent £3,500 on a building comprising two courts, changing rooms and general amenities.

Called Cardiff Squash Club it was reported that within two months it had 150 members (two thirds men). A third court was added shortly after opening, and a glassback followed in 1978. Squash Wales - Sboncen Cymru

In Zimbabwe, (formerly Rhodesia) the capital Harare (formerly Salisbury) had its first court built in a private house around 1920. It was called Princes Club (and still is), because the Prince of Wales played there when visiting when it was first constructed!

In 1974 a glass back court with viewing was built at Salisbury Sports Club (now called Harare Sports Club), sunken, so that ground level was around the height (and so it has been flooded more than once!). It featured cut-away wings and viewing for up to 800 – a huge capacity before four-sided viewing arrived. In 1976 Geoff Hunt beat Jonah Barrington in the richly funded Rhodesian International event final. It remains in use now.

Zimbabwe first sent a team to the Men's World Team Championship in 1981, and despite funding challenges since 1998 have been regular entrants into the World Junior Men's Team event, as well as two appearance in the Junior Women's so far.
